The Culture Class Project is an initiative that aims to ease the difficult transition San children experience when they leave the village to attend boarding school. The goal to reduce the dropout rate is paired with equally important goals designed to develop their sense of pride for traditional Ju/'hoan skills, values and knowledge. In addition to hunting, tracking and gathering, the children also play traditional games, dance, as well as learn to read and write their mother-tongue. Storytelling is another important part of the Culture Class Project. The funding provided allows us to bring elders together with the children to share stories on a regular basis.

The Job Hunters Project reaches out to the large population of youth and adults that have dropped out of the formal education system. Our aim is to empower them to access income through employment, entrepreneurial activities, as well as creating opportunities to earn income from their traditional skills. Another key aspect of the Job Hunters Project is the Business Support Unit. Members of the community have access to assistance here such as how to apply for start-up funds, register a business, manage finances, maintain stock, etc. The aim is to get business started and keep them running successfully. Training from TUCSIN and/or from our many partners is sometimes straightforward, such as in bricklaying, needlework and beadwork. Other forms of training are very unique and tailor made to address specific needs in the local San community.

Our Academic Success Project has been designed to help school going children to achieve higher levels of academic success. The focus is on the formal education system and helping students improve their grades in the subjects of the National Curriculum. One of the activities of the Project gives out-of-school youth a second chance at completing secondary school. They receive financial, logistical and study support, carefully designed to ensure the greatest opportunity at success. Our after school centre is another initiative of the project. Here, the students can get study support, help with homework and projects, reading and remedial support. They may also come just to read or play games carefully chosen to expand their minds and develop their interests.

The Six Nyae Nyae Village Schools are located in remote areas surrounding Tsumkwe. They are the only school in the entire Southern African Region that offer a San language as the medium for instruction and teach Ju/'hoansi reading and writing as a subject. The demand for this form of education is very high amongst parents and children, but most cannot attend due to lack of food. In order to increase access to the NNVS, TUCSIN Tsumkwe Provides additional food provisions, which enables children from surrounding villages to stay at the school during the week.
